SUBJECT Helping the Intelligence Community

KEN ALVORD: Ken Alvord here with Senator Barry Goldwater for his morning conversation.

And, Senator, it looks like out of that mix, a committee you've devoted a lot of time to as a ranking minority member will now become yours, the Senate Select Intelligence Committee. Changes, things that you've thought of doing, would like to see happen with that committee and the ways that it operates. What would you do?

SENATOR BARRY GOLDWATER: Well, I would like to see us concentrate on helping the intelligence community to build a stronger and better community. And I would like very, very much to get Senator Huddleston started again on writing up some new rules whereby the CIA members, the intelligence members of other groups can be protected from the murder-like efforts of people who do not like the CIA.

We have to have a very strong intelligence community in this country. And I'm going to do everything I can to provide this country with the type of intelligence that we must have if we're going to stay out of war and know what other countries are doing. We already have a good intelligence system, but we need a better one. And I'm going to break my neck trying to get it.

ALVORD: Senator, where do the limits of that protection lie? Beyond which limits should the intelligence community not be allowed to go?

SENATOR GOLDWATER: Well, of course, that's what we have to get into. But I think it's pretty clear. If a person
